What is a blog?

- Three main features
 1. Usually run by a single person
 2. The posts are in reverse chronological order
- Reed: blogs “present the life of a sovereign subject who has a continuous identity and a coherent history” (226)
- 3. Comments are enabled
 - i Blog is built by blogger and audience (Nardi et al.; boyd)

A blog is a dialogical medium: constituted by the interaction of bloggers, commenters and readers who form a generative site of social meanings and practices

© Julian Hopkins 2008

Hateblog & Blogwar

- Hateblog
 - i Usually anonymous
 - i Uses offensive language or images
 - i Purpose: to insult or slander a blogger or other person
- Blogwar
 - i Series of attacks and counter-attacks between bloggers
 - i May involve the use of a hateblog as a ‘dirty weapon’
- “Perhaps only when faced with [community-threatening] threats does the true nature of a virtual community reveal itself.” (Joinson & Dietz-Uhler 286)
- By analysing the blogwar I hope to be able to find out more about what bloggers and blog readers value in a blog

© Julian Hopkins 2008

Anonymity & Pseudonymity

- Donath: “reputation of any kind is impossible in a purely anonymous environment” (21)
 - i In 1996: homepages being used to provide “depth and nuance not found in the ephemeral Usenet environment” (ibid:11)
- Slater: trust difficulties managed in IRC (online chat) group by “progressive embodiment” (114) through further contact by voice, video or mail, or “object constancy” (115)
- Sustained interpersonal interaction online is rendered possible by the existence of stable pseudonyms
 - i Blogs are believed to reflect the authentic personality of the blogger

The articulation of On- & Offline

- Miller & Slater refuse to “treat the Internet independently of its embeddedness” (2000:8)
 - i Following Latour, they affirm the internet as an ‘actant’ (ibid.)
- We can talk of the blogosphere as a ‘field’ (re. Bourdieu), with practices that derive from technological affordances
 - i But it intersects with other overlapping fields: MSM, Social-Political, gender, entertainment industry, etc.
 - i Capital (social, cultural) accumulated in one field can be transferred to others

There is no ‘virtual world’ and ‘real world’ dichotomy: only one world of interlocking fields, practices and habituses

Blogwar – the history

- In the second half of 2005, BlogQueen posted some controversial posts on:
 - i Visiting KL
 - i Using disabled toilets
 - i Bangladeshi/foreign workers harassing women
- Many accused her of being racist and intolerant
- A semi-formal online campaign targeting advertisers on BlogQueen’s blog was initiated
 - i IronLady and AntiBlogQueen supported this campaign

© Julian Hopkins 2008

Blogwar – the history

- IronLady had criticised BlogQueen for considering a free 'bikini shoot' with a men's magazine
 - i However, in the end IronLady also accepted
- At the photo shoot she took a photo of BlogQueen and posted it online
 - i BlogQueen openly admits to digitally enhancing all her photos ('Photoshopping'), this one was not
 - i IronLady removed the photo after BlogQueen complained
- Later, they crossed paths at a bar
 - i IronLady greeted BlogQueen, felt snubbed, and swore at her
 - i BlogQueen felt threatened
- The next day, the hateblog appeared

Hateblog

Attacking IronLady – using a parodic pseudonym

AntiBlogQueen's pseudonym

"Oh you, old saggy skank
 Sorry, we have to be frank
 Your face was run over by a tank
 Your parents must've played you a prank"

Oh, dear old mommy,
 Please don't cry
 I know your ancient pussy is dry
 Even if you wash up in the sky
 Old moons would come and try
 So, all you can say is "Cheer bye, Bye bye!"
 Oh, dear flapping grass mamma,
 Maybe it's karma,
 For you called here with Sang Hla Utama
 Kim ok na...
 but all said: We don't want a grandpa!

IronLady started all this first. you mean she's expecting them to just allow her to insult them and get away with it?

i wonder why people set up hate blog? it's not good hating people...

How can she be the blogger queen of Singapore? It is an insult to all in Singapore who blogs...

You r so cool man!

Sorry sorry.. my bad. Mistook you for Angel... my bad.. i defame you.. please dun sue me or create hate-site for me

The war between the two parties. Two self-important bloggers

Hateblog

The screenshot shows a blog post with a title 'Hateblog' and several lines of text. Below the text, there is a '2 Comments' section. Three callout boxes are overlaid on the image:

- Top right: Commenters return, and the blog post evolves over time. Deleting comments is disapproved of.
- Middle left: Interesting, how things seem to have changed overnight. Where are all the COMMENTS? What happened?
- Bottom left: lol, fark this is eerily funny, eerie cos its true

Blogwar – Chronology

The timeline is represented by a large arrow pointing to the right, with several red circles marking key events:

- Before: online and offline clashes
- 9 Jan: Hateblog appears
- 10 Jan: Second and third post
- 11 Jan: Fourth post
- 12 Jan: Fifth and final post
- 30 Jan: Final search. 44 posts linked to the hateblog collected

© Julian Hopkins 2008

The hateblog existed for 4-5 days, and then was deleted

Methodology – Content Analysis

Arguments
	Category	Explanation
For blogs and comments	Authenticity	Criticising the use of ABQ's pseudonym, discussing anonymity, asserting the authentic expression of the blogger in his/her blog
	Style	When the style of writing is addressed
	Publicity	When references are made to publicity seeking – e.g. in the form of seeking more hits to a blog
	Comments	Regarding comments, e.g. when comments are censored, or someone directly discusses commenting
	Money	When income generation matters are addressed
	Offline	When offline events are referred to in relation to online issues
	Values	i.e. Values that do not relate specifically to online affordances
For comments only	Entertainment	When the blogwar is treated as entertainment
	Technical	When issues relating to manipulating technical aspects of blogs are referred to

'Trio': grouped, on the assumption that they are all related to the authentic performance

'Values': generalised arguments used that are not confined to online issues

Methodology – Content Analysis

'Authenticity'

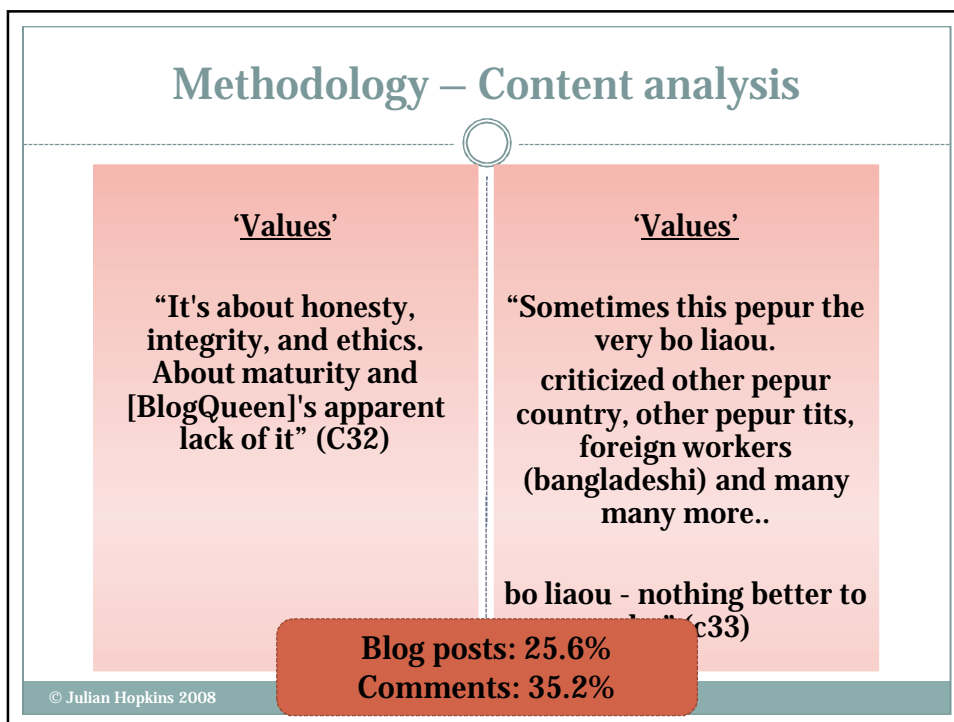

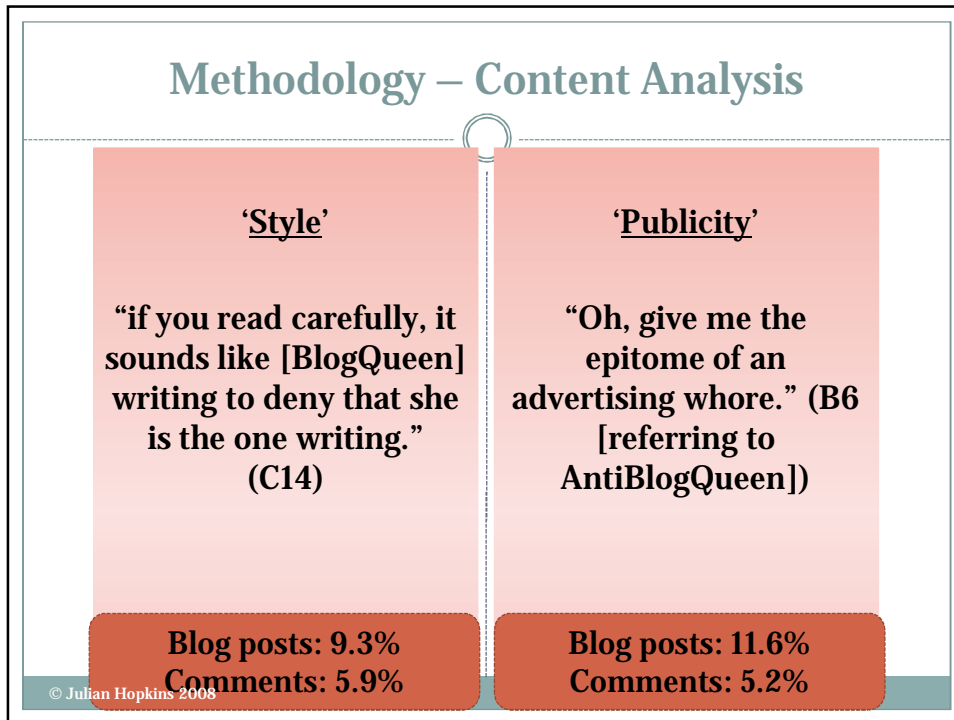

“you have shown that your blog is as ‘real’ as possible to the real you. And I'm very sure by this fact alone has won you a lot of readers and respect.” ([a commenter speaking to IronLady] C27)

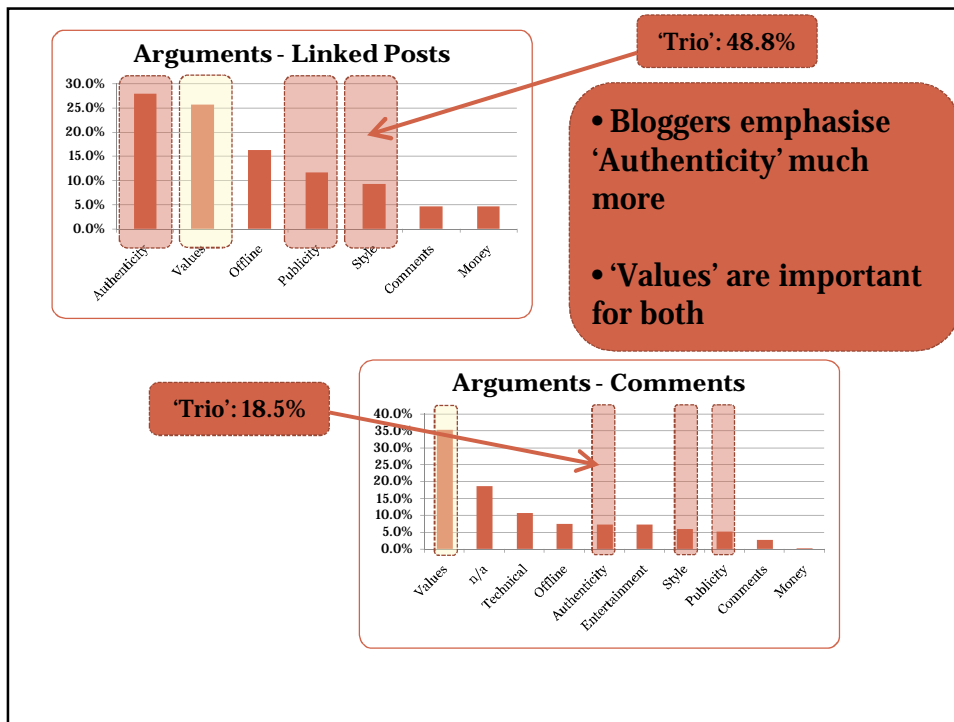

'Authenticity'

“[BlogQueen] is trying to protrait this 'nice' image of her on her own blog. And when she want to flame someone badly, she do it under another name. Not a new name. Another Blogger's name [AntiBlogQueen]. This, to me, is just shit.” (C11)

Blog posts: 27.9%
Comments: 7.2%

Findings & Conclusions

- 'Blogocentric' arguments à centred around pseudonym & the authentic performance
- Benjamin: authenticity and its 'aura' is a product of socio-economic relations
 - i "The cult of the movie star, fostered by the money of the film industry, preserves not the unique aura of the person but the 'spell of the personality,' the phony spell of a commodity." (Benjamin 224)
- Not arguing for the existence of 'real' authenticity – but that as an actant, it is 'enrolled' by bloggers and

- Generalised values from offline fields à no virtual/real dichotomy
- Appadurai also avoids dichotomies: "...looking at the commodity potential of all things" (ibid:13)
 - i A commodity is "any thing intended for exchange" (9) – this is contingent on social context
 - i All things can go through a "commodity candidacy ... that define the exchangeability of things in any particular social context." (ibid:13-14).

Why did the hateblog fail in its 'commodity candidacy'?
Why did it fail to become something worthy of exchange?

© Julian Hopkins 2008

Findings & Conclusions

- Kelty: study of Open Source online 'gift economy'
 - i i.e. It is not the thing (commodity, licence, blog) that is being exchanged, but the potential to create social ties through the thing
- Authenticity enables social interaction – no stable individual identities means no way to anchor an enduring habitus
 - i The hateblog threatened the basis of the blogosphere
- The authentic blog is thus a dialogically created medium that acts as an articulatory node, dynamically and contingently enabling the development of a field of blogging – the 'blogosphere'.
